A Merry Christmas.

Men are not, as a rule, logical. There is Mr. McMillan, of Toledo, for example. Last week he proclaimed to all his friends that he felt it to be vastly more blessed to give than to receive. He said that he intended to make his wife a beautiful Christmas present, and that the idea gave him more pleasure than the reception of a gift of three dezen Scriptural mottoes for the walls of his parlor could give him. He has now radically changed his opinion, and uses language in regard to Christmas presents which is well adapted to make the blocd run cold. The reason for this sudden change of opinion is to the last degree illogical and irrelevant, and how Mr. McMillan can regard himself as a reasonable being it is hard to imagine. On Tuesday last, after having worn out all the jewelers in Toledo by a prolonged examins tion of their stock, Mr. McMillan finally bought a beautiful bracelet for $25, with the provision that he might return it the next day, if, on further consideration, he should decide that he did not want it. The bracelet was put up in a nice little box, which was wrapped in white paper, and Mr. McMillan wrote on the that she immediately suspected that something While sitting at the tea table, Mr. Me Millan led the conversation to the subject of Christmas presents, and incidentally remarked, with a twinkle of the eye that showed that he was king, that he rather thought he should not give his wife anything. He said that if he really leved a woman, he should like to give her a splendid bracelot, but, of course, he did not care enough for anybody to give them anything. Mrs. McMillan might perhaps have taken exception to her busband's remark as a specimen of graceful English, but she was so well persuaded that he was joking that she almost felt the coming braceles enciroling her wrist. For the rest of the meal she was exceedingly affectionate, and did not once indulge in her usual criticisms of the mental and moral habits of her husband.

In the course of the evening Mrs. McMillan surreptitiously searched Mr. McMillan's pockets and discovered the bracelet. She was filled with gratitude and iny. The affectionate words written on the case aff cied her almost to tears and she mentally resolved that during the com ing year she would abstain from the use of coercive measures of a violent nature except in exiteme circumstaters and when her temper might be ususually excited. The next morning Mr. McMillan bigan to think that perhaps his wife might out be particularly pleased with a bracelet. B sides, $25 really did amount to a large sum. Might it not be better to return the bracelet to the jeweler and to give Mrs. McMillan $10 or $15 in money to sport day she might think proper? He deband the question all day, and toward evening decides that, on the whole, he would take tack it e bree he and give his wife a $10 Lill. That on he, at the tra table, he was even hoppier and mirraray than he had been on the previous evenies. This time he had fically settled the question of what to give his wife, and he had received a judenous recommey by resoluting to spend $10 instead of $25. A happier and more off onenate household than that of the McMalao family on the sight of the 24th of December could not have been found in all Tuledo. The next morning, with the early bells ushered in the happy Christmas season, Mrs. McMillau arose and dressed herself. Her Lusband woke up while this ceremony was in progress, and, after wishing his wife a merry Christmas, told her to bring him his trouvers and he would give her a present. The hoppy wils obeyed, and waited with beating hear; for her bracelet. To her inexpressible disappointment, Mr. McMillan took out his purse, gave her a too deliar bill, and said, There, my doar; buy whatever you want most, give you the money instead of jewelry, or anything e'si, because I want you to have a present that will be some satisfaction to you." Mrs. McMillan maintained a painful silence. She put the moory in her pocket, but never expressed the slightest gratitude for it. As she walked toward a closet and took flom it a stout rope, Mr. McMillau began to grow alarmed, and his alarm become very lively when his wife, with amezing swifeces and vigor, bound him to the bedstead, and then went down stairs for the broomstick. Oa her reappearance, she asked him in s cold, sarcastic way if his "precious darling" liked her expensive bracelet. "You couldn't give the wife of your bosom but ten dollars, could you?" remarked Mrs. McMillan, italicizing her words with the broomstick; you could lavish thirty dollar bracelets on a wicked, good for nothing hussy O I'll let you know!" And accordingly she did "let Mr. McMillan know," with a s'rength that he had never before imagined that sho possessed. In vain did the unhappy man protest that he had "never given no bracelet to pobody." The angry matron was deaf to his protestations. All day he remained bound to his bed. He had neither breakfast nor dio-

his braises had healed sufficiently to enable him to walk without excessive pain, that he pro-claimed his detestation of Christmas and of Christmas gifts. It must be admitted that in this he was grossly illogical. Undoubtedly, his wife was in error, and perhaps she expressed her feelings with too much emphasis, and in a way that was open to criticism. Still, there was no reason why Mr. McMillan should de nounce Christmas in a broad, indiscrimicating way, and it is only too evident that he is not s man who can be called an exact and careful reasoner .- New York Times. esiled to Tult's Expectorant, and I coniess my surprise at its wonderful power. During a practice of twenty years I have never known a medicine to act as promptly and with such happy effects. It instantly subdued the most violentists of coughing, and invariably cured the disease in a few days. I cheerfully endorse it as the best lung medicine I over used.
